Homework 5 Reflection
Dian Lee

3-5 UI Bugs:

1. The first bug I found was that only the main homepage was missing a logo on the navigation bar. I added a logo on the homepage in order to meet a heuristic rule: consistency and standards.

2. Secondly, the 'shop now' button did not change color on hover which made it difficult for users to know that the button was an action item. I made the button change to a darker shade in order to meet heuristic rule: visibility of system status.
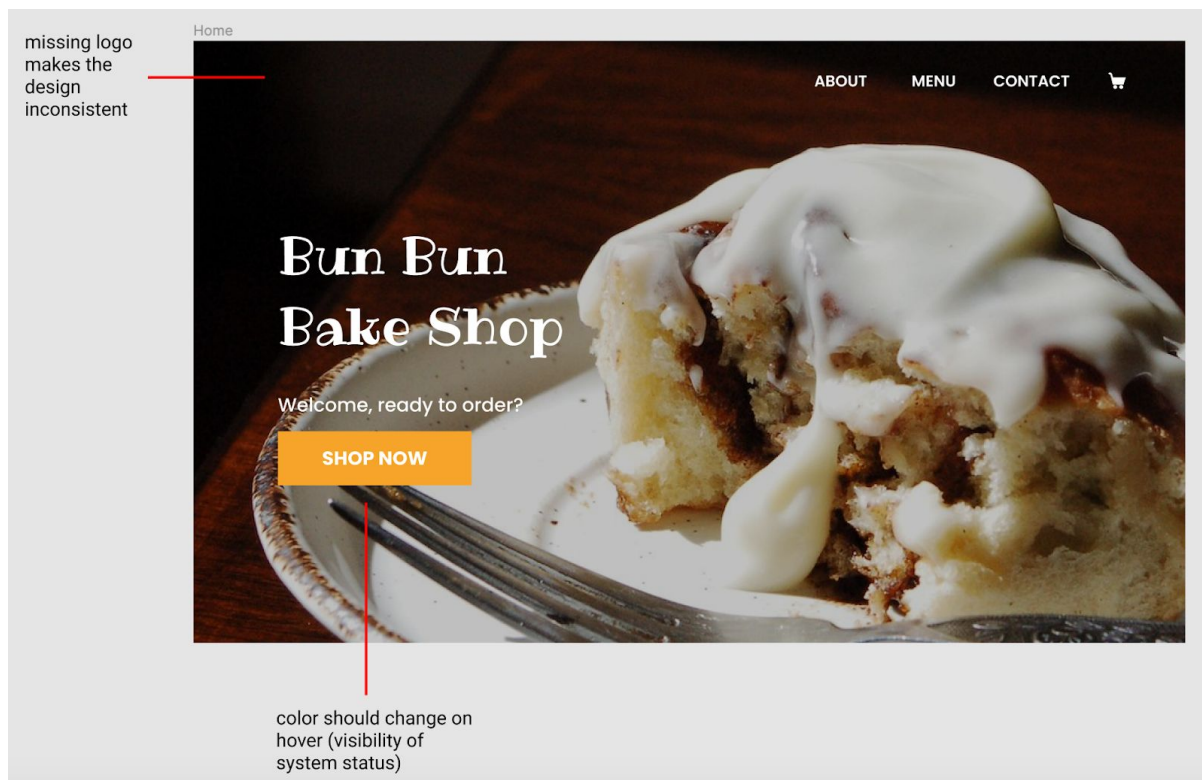

3. Thirdly, I added an edit button to the cart summary on the checkout page so that, as a heuristic rule states, users have control and freedom

4. Lastly, I changed the cinnabon menu photos so that certain excessively vivid colors are removed. This meets rule: aesthetic and minimalist design.

Challenges:

The biggest challenge that I encountered while implementing was correctly sizing and placing the menu photos. In order to overcome this, I used row and column divs and styled each photo's width to be 30% of the screen. By doing this, I was able to make two rows and three columns of photos within the menu page. Another challenge was placing the contents in the navigation bar in the middle. Due to the logo image, the text seemed as if they were placed at the very bottom end of the bar. By adding 'justify-content: center' in the css file for the links, I was able to fix this problem.

Brand Identity:

The brand identity/look that I chose to design for was a warm, welcoming, and clean look. I wanted to deliver to the audience that Bun Bun Bake Shop is a friendly shop that is clean and specializes in tasty buns. It is well reflected in my design choices in that I make a consistent use of the color orange. The color psychology of orange indicates that the color is energetic and warm. All the photos that I chose also deliver a warm mood and are of high quality. The overall website does not use excess decorations either and uses square designs to give a clean feel.
